Control: Participants administer and regulate their own usage of texting facilities, with specific billing and auditing reports. The service also supports customisation and branding options so that the tools and the messages are clearly associated with the organisation deploying them.

Integration: Using the PageOne SOAP API, you have access to a suite of message distribution and management services within a secure environment. SOAP is platform neutral and is supported by most programming environments including Java, Delphi, PHP and .NET.

For more information on integration click here [3].

A Moodle interface module called MoodleMobile and MoodleMobile 2 have been developed to allow Moodle VLE users access to the Janet txt messaging service. For further information click here [4]

Two way communications: Organisations simply push out information and can solicit responses when required, such as opt-in to information bulletins, simple polling or requests for further information or contact.

Accessibility: The service supports multilingual formats, non-text based delivery (email and text-to-voice options), and international delivery.

Flexibility: Messages may be prepared from templates using mail merge functions, and scheduled for delivery at appropriate times. Potential recipients may also be grouped into relevant groups for bulk delivery of messages (e.g. 'all staff', '2 nd year law students', etc.).

Reliability: The service has been designed from the start as a secure and highly available facility tailored to honour best practice in handling data potentially relating to minors or vulnerable adults. Relevant operating staff will have undergone Criminal Records Bureau checks.
